It is alleged that in his foreface was compiled by O no Yasumaro at the request of Empress Genmei in the early 8th century (711-712), and thus generally considered the oldest exalted literary work in Japan. [3] The myths contained in Kojik and Nihon Shoki (本書紀) are part of the inspiration behind many practices. Later myths were re-arranged for Shinto's practices, such as the ritual of cleaning up misogyno. [5] [6] [7] Compositional Portrait O No Yasumaro Kikuchi Yosaia (19th century) Is believed to be that the compilation of various genealygic and anecdotal histories of the Imperial (Yamato) yard and prominent clans began during the reign of Emperors Keitai and Kinmei in the 6th century, with the first concerted effort on the historical compilation we recorded being what was done in 620 under the auspices of Prince Shotoku and Soga According to Nihon Shoki, the documents drawn up on their initiative were Tennoki (天皇記, also Sumera-mikoto no fumi) or The Record of Emperors, Kokkie (國記, also Kunitsufumi) or National Record and other fundamental records (本記, hongi or motofutsumi) pertaining to influential clans and free subjects. Of these texts, only Kokkie survived after burning down sogas estate nor Emishi (where these documents were stored) during the ishi 645 incident, and he himself must have been lost shortly afterwards. Kojiki's forehand indicates that leading families also keep their own historical and genealogical records; indeed, one of the reasons it gives to compile Kojiki is to correct the bugs allegedly crept into these documents. According to the prefat, Emperor Tenmu (reigned 673-686) ordered to review and issue clan documents and ordered a certain judicial attendant (tone) a memory named Hieda no is to memorize recordings and usable traditions relating to imperial crap. In addition to this memorization, nothing happened before the reign of Empress Genmei (reigning 707-715), who in the 18th month of 711 (Wadō 4) ordered the approbation of O No Yasumaro to record what was learned by Hieda no Are. He graduated and presented his work to Empress Genmei on The 28th Month of 712 (Wadō 5). [3] Goal Page from the manuscript of Shinpukuji Kojiki, dated 1371-1372 Kujiki, is a matching of various traditions woven into a single official mythology made in an attempt to justify the rule of Jamatos imperial politics and at the same time conquer different interest groups under their wing, giving them a place and an interest in national genealogy. In addition to the further imperial agenda, increased interest in the origins of the nation in reaction to the influx of foreign culture and the need for authoritative
